KICHIGAI KEESHONDEN

Kichigai is a small family run kennel occasionally breeding a litter of puppies.

Our dogs all live with us as members of our family, living in the house with our children.

This information pack is given to any person who enquires in to purchasing a Keeshond puppy from us. As breeders we feel that the more information that a prospective purchaser can gain before actually getting the puppy, the more aware they will be of the responsibilities of owning a puppy.

If you go on to purchase a puppy from us you will receive a detailed diet sheet and all the information on your puppy including a full pedigree and if relevant registration documents.

Although we would always like to have a puppy for everyone who wishes one, we cannot guarantee that at the time of asking or even from the next litter that there will be a puppy available. Puppies can be booked many months in advance and we always like to make sure people are aware that we have no control over how many puppies are born in any one litter.

All our breeding goes through the Keeshond Club Epilepsy Scheme.

Will all readings being below 26%

Since the introduction of a DNA test for PHPT all breeding will be from Negative dogs/bitches either by test or decent.

We Never take deposits as we feel that if we cannot, or you feel you cannot trust us to be honest and open in our dealings we will find it hard to have a long and open relationship with you. It also means that you are not committed to buying a puppy if you find that your circumstances change.

THE KEESHOND
(DUTCH BARGE DOG)

This is the Dutch National Breed used as a watchdog on barges in Holland. During the French Revolution, a man called Kees de Gyselaer led the patriots. This man was a great dog lover and owned a dog-called Kees. Kees became the Symbol of the patriots and gave the breed its name.

The Keeshond dog was originally brought to England by Mrs Wingfield-Digby, where it was to reside in the magnificent surroundings of Sherborne Castle in Dorset. In October 1925 Mrs Wingfield-Digby was fundamental in the starting of the “The Dutch Barge Dog Club”.

The name was changed a year later to “The Keeshond Club” in 1926 at the request of the Kennel Club. Whilst on holiday with her family the then,

Miss Hamilton-Fletcher, stopped in a village called Zaandam and stayed for a week buying her first Keeshonds thus the start of the first ever Keeshond kennel VAN ZAANDAM KEESHONDS

It is to this lady and others like her that we owe so much as without them we could not have the breed that we all love and admire in the UK today.

The Keeshonds general appearance is a short, compact body, confident carriage, thus giving the square outline on the body desirable to breeders. The Fox-like head, when looked at from above should be wedged shaped with dark

A large ruff should be present around the neck, shoulders and chest giving the impression of a lion's mane. The body should be compact with a short straight back, with a good spring of ribs and depth of brisket.

A Keeshond should have a well-feathered tail curled over its back forming a part of the overall outline of the dog. The tail should be light in colour with a black tip.

Movement should be brisk, straight and sharp. When viewed from the back the hind legs should be strong and muscled with the pasterns parallel to each other. The front legs should be straight turning neither in nor out. The feet should be cat like with black nails and cream in colour

The colour is a mixture of Grey and Black with a thick undercoat of pale grey or cream. Standing 18 inches in the dogs and 17 inches in the bitches

The Keeshonds coat although consisting of two layers an undercoat of soft thick, light coloured hair and an abundant outer coat of straight harsh, grey shaded hair. It is surprising how easily the coat is kept in good condition. The best thing you can do for your Keeshond is to regularly groom him, this giving you the contact with him and the chance to check for any abnormalities on your dog's body. If your dog has been trained from an early age he should find the grooming process an enjoyable experience. Bathing need only be done as necessary as the Keeshonds coat keeps its self clean with regular grooming.

There is some trimming to do on the Keeshond but this can achieve good results if time is taken over it. The feet are the main area, which needs trimming you, do this by trimming the excess hairs which grow between the pads then you trim around the feet to give them a neat appearance. The nails need to be trimmed to keep them short.

The legs are trimmed to give a nice neat appearance, trimming all straggly hair on the feathering on the front legs. The hind legs have the hair on the back of the leg up to the hock neatened.

You will need some brushes and a good metal toothcomb. You start by parting the hair down to the skin and brush through removing all knots with the comb. Always brushing the coat towards the head. Lifting the coat as you go the end result will depend on how much time you take on the grooming.

Fan the tail out making sure that there are no knots.

When you have finished let him shake and admire the finished dog.

The Keeshond should only need a good stiff weekly brushing to keep the coat in top shape.

Keeshonds love to show off and make fantastic show dogs wanting to please their owners all the time. Many children have showed Keeshonds (thus making them an ideal junior handling dog).

A Keeshond will if treated with respect give you years of unconditional love and respect but be warned having got your first Keeshond expect the second to follow as soon, as you can never seem to get enough of them.

Its sturdy, intelligent and adaptable characteristics make for the ideal companion and guard dog. A Keeshond will naturally protect the family children although he has not been trained for it. Although very loyal they can be as stubborn as any child when they do not wish to do something.

There are two clubs for the UK Keeshonden. Holding Championship and open shows with a variety of other activities

THE KEESHOND BREED STANDARD

A Breed Standard is the guideline which describes the ideal characteristics, temperament and appearance of a breed and ensures that the breed is fit for function. Absolute soundness is essential. Breeders and judges should at all times be careful to avoid obvious conditions or exaggerations which would be detrimental in any way to the health, welfare or soundness of this breed. From time to time certain conditions or exaggerations may be considered to have the potential to affect dogs in some breeds adversely, and judges and breeders are requested to refer to the Kennel Club website for details of any such current issues. If a feature or quality is desirable it should only be present in the right measure.

Prefix

This FAQ sheet is taken from an American based Keeshond Kennel and although many of the contents are relevant, there are some of the Medical conditions, which in this country are not.

In the UK there are at present no specific tests, which your dogs Have to have before a mating takes place.

Although these conditions are not widespread in the UK we felt that to ignore the information given here and to withhold it would be negligent on our part.

If you have any questions regarding this please feel free to contact us.

Although at present the DNA test for PHPT is not compulsory before a breeding takes place. We have had our breeding stock tested and from 2007 only be using Negative by test or decent dogs within our breeding program.

More information on PHPT can be obtained from ourselves or the breed clubs websites.

Description

The Keeshond has been bred for centuries as the ideal family companion and watchdog. Their magnificent appearance and sense of loyalty have made them an appealing breed around the world. Their natural tendencies are such that no special training is usually needed for a Keeshond to act as a watchdog for his home, keeping it safe from intruders. The Kees descended from the same arctic strains that produced the Samoyed, Spitz and the Norwegian Elkhound. Correct pronunciation of the breed name is caze-hawnd, but the Americanized keys-hawnd is also acceptable. Most Kees fanciers will cringe, however, if you mistakenly pronounce, or spell, the last syllable as "hound". Plural of Keeshond is Keeshonden, the "en" ending signifies plural in Dutch. A Keeshond is happiest around people, and will willingly accept any stranger that its owners accept.

Recognition

The Keeshond is recognized among the following kennel clubs: AKC, UKC, KCGB, CKC, and ANKC. The official AKC Standard for the Keeshond was approved by the AKC on July 12, 1949. It is not included here due to copyright concerns, but you may write to the national breed club or the AKC for a copy.

History

The Keeshond is a very old breed and there is little doubt that the fact it was never intended to hunt, kill animals or attack criminals accounts for its gentleness and devotion. In the 17th and 18th centuries, Keeshonden were used as watchdogs, good-luck companions, and vermin controllers on riverboats, farms and barges. They were known as Wolfspitz (Germany), Chiens Loup (France), Lupini (Italy), and Keeshonden (Holland). During the 1700's, in Holland, Cornelius "Kees" de Gyzelaar, a leader in the Dutch Patriot revolt against the reigning House of Orange, kept one of these dogs as his constant companion. The Keeshond became the symbol of the Patriot Party. This is the basis for the breed name as "Kees' dog", which in Dutch would be "Kees hund". The Patriots' were defeated, however, and many Keeshonden were destroyed to disavow any connection with the failed rebel party. The only Kees that remained were a few on barges and farms. The breed was not revived until nearly a century later through Baroness van Hardenbroek and Miss J. D. Van der Blom.

Throughout the late 1800's, Keeshonden had appeared in England under the names of "fox-dogs," "overweight Pomeranians" and "Dutch Barge Dogs." This British dog was the progeny of the German Wolfspitz crossed with a percentage of Dutch imports.

After the turn of the 20th century, Mrs. Wingfield Digby and Mrs. Alice Gatacre aroused great interest in England and in 1926 an English breed club was formed with "Keeshond" as the official name. With rare exceptions, the Kees in the United States are derived from British breeding.

The first American litter was bred in 1929 by Carl Hinderer of Baltimore, MD. The first Keeshond was registered with the American Kennel Club in 1930 in the Non-Sporting Group. The Keeshond Club of America, as it was later named, was organized in 1935. Mrs. Virginia Ruttkay pioneered Keeshond breeding in the Eastern US, founding her kennel in 1946. Mr. and Mrs. Porter Washington of California purchased their first Keeshond in 1932, providing foundation stock for many successful Western US kennels.

Characteristics and Temperament Coat and Grooming

The Keeshond is a double-coated breed. This coat consists of a woolly undercoat and longer guard hairs. Twice a year, Keeshonden "blow" their undercoats, that is, they shed their undercoats completely. It is a very intense shedding period that can last up to three weeks from start to finish. The good news is that this only happens twice a year. The remainder of the time, Keeshonden are relatively shed free (unlike smooth coated breeds). The bad news is that the shedding period can be rather messy. The hair comes out in large and small clumps. Lots of vacuuming and brushing are in order.

The Keeshond is a very clean and relatively odor free dog. It tends to clean itself like a cat. Even when a Keeshond becomes covered in mud, it will clean itself. Bathing needs are minimal; thorough brushings and/or "dry baths" using a mixture of cornstarch and baby powder often suffices. A full bath may not be necessary more than once per year or when the dog is obviously dirty. Whitening shampoos will bring out the "brightness" of the coat.

Other than during coat-blowing season, the Keeshond needs relatively little grooming. Daily brushing is ideal, but two or three times a week is sufficient; the brushing should be thorough to penetrate the outer coat and remove any loose undercoat. A long pin brush, a slicker brush and possibly a rake are essential grooming tools.

Trimming needs are minimal, and if done should be done so that it looks natural and uncut. The body coat should never be clipped or trimmed except for medical reasons. Their nails should be checked and clipped periodically.

NEVER clip a Keeshond for the summer. After the undercoat has been "blown out," the outer coat provides insulation from the heat and protection from the sun. Exposed skin will be very sensitive to the sun, and will sunburn very easily; this can lead to skin cancer. Regular grooming and constant access to cool water are particularly important in the summer, especially in warmer climates. Temperament The typical Keeshond has an outgoing personality.

It is outwardly affectionate with its family and will accept strangers readily once the owner has showed no concern for the stranger's presence. The Keeshond makes an excellent watch dog, that is, will bark a stern warning any time a stranger approaches the household or one of its members. The Keeshond rarely bites, however, and therefore does not make a good guard dog.

The Keeshond is a very trainable breed, but has a mischievous streak that often results in embarrassment for the owner. Some Kees have done very well in obedience competitions, but most trainers will tell you about the "jokes" their dogs have pulled on them in the ring. Keeshonden are friendly by nature to both people and other dogs. Their demand for affection is moderate to high. The pack-oriented nature of the Keeshond means that they do better when included in the family (pack, from their point of view) than when left outside by themselves. As befits their Northern ancestry, they may enjoy spending periods outside - particularly during cold weather - but their "place" should be inside with the rest of the pack.

The Keeshond is known as the "Smiling Dutchman", which is often displayed as a curled lip or submissive grin. Certain breeds have a propensity for this behavior, the Keeshond is one of them. The grin is a sign of submission and often used as a greeting for people the dog is particularly fond of.

Barking, Talking, and Howling

Keeshonden both bark and talk, though they generally do not howl. The alert tone of a Keeshond bark "on watch" will warn all that a stranger is near. Some Keeshonden are more frequent barkers and should be corrected with a "quiet" command. Rarely is a Keeshond a nuisance barker. The Keeshond may also "talk" with a soft "aroo" or "woo-woo" sound similar to the Malamute and Samoyed.

Care and Training

Feeding

When you pick up your puppy, your breeder should tell you what the puppy has been eating, as well as recommendation as to the best food and feeding frequency in the future. You should try and follow the puppy's diet at the time you collect him from the breeder as best you can, until the puppy is settled in to its new environment. Then you can gradually change the diet to suit your preferences. Sudden changes in diet can severely disrupt the puppy's digestive system and cause gastric distress.

As for the type and "brand" of dog food, basically any reputable dog food manufacturer provides a dog food that is sufficient to keep a dog healthy. However, the premium brands of dog food have the advantage that one can feed the dog less and still get very good nourishment. In addition, stool size and amount is generally less with the premium dog foods. Be sure and pick a frequency of feeding, brand, and type of food to suit your dogs needs.

For show or active Kees, something equivalent to a Science Diet Performance or Eukanuba is in order. For Kees that go for walks and hikes, a Maintenance formula is usually best. Consult your breeder and veterinarian for advice. Housing Keeshonden are happiest when they can share in family activities.

The best arrangement is one in which the dog can come in and out of the house of its own free-will, through a dog door. If a dog door is not possible, then training the dog to go to an outside door to be let out is also very easy to do. Outside, the dog should have a large, fenced yard. The fence should be strong and at least 4 feet tall. Keeshonden do not generally attempt to escape the confines of their yard, but, if left alone for long periods of time or abandoned to the back yard, they can and will perform some amazing feats of escape.

They are prone to dig shallow "wallows" in hot weather; they will typically just turn over a layer of dirt to get to the cooler earth just below the surface. The Keeshond can remain outside in very cold weather. However, you should provide shelter from the elements in the form of a good sturdy house. A good insulated house with nice straw bedding is perfect for Keeshonden that spend most of their time outside. Heating the dog house is usually not necessary.

It should be stressed that leaving a Keeshond outside all the time is definitely inferior accommodations to being inside with the family. Again, problems may develop as the dog becomes bored.

Training

Training Keeshonden, as any Northern breed, can be a challenge. Unlike other Northern breeds, however, the Keeshond is not nearly as stubborn as it is clever. When training a Kees, it will usually attempt to "make up" things as it goes along to make obedience more interesting. While the dog is usually very pleased with its efforts, the owner can be completely at wit's end. Training Keeshonden requires a sense of humour first and foremost.

Special Medical Problems

The Keeshond, as a breed, is relatively free of particular breed-related medical problems. The following conditions listed occur infrequently in Keeshonden obtained from a reputable breeder, but occasionally are present in the breed.

Hip Dysplasia This is a genetic disorder that affects some Keeshonden: the proportion of 'pet shop' or 'backyard bred' Kees with this condition is significantly greater than Kees obtained from a reputable breeder. Simply put, hip dysplasia is a deformation in the hip joint. The head of the femur does not sit solidly in the acetabulum. The joint lacks tightness, and the condition results in a painful and often debilitating life for the dog. Hip dysplasia is considered to be a moderately inheritable condition. Reputable breeders will have breeding pairs OFA (Orthopaedic Foundation for Animals) certified prior to breeding. OFA certification can be given only after a dog is over 24 months old. Responsible breeding by Keeshond breeders has led to a tremendous decrease in the incidence of hip dysplasia in the breed.

Subluxation of the Patella "Slipped stifles" simply means that slipping of the kneecap on the rear legs. This condition, whether hereditary or caused by trauma, can be identified by a veterinarian during an examination. Patellar subluxation is correctable by surgery but because it is hereditary (unless caused by injury) it is not recommended that dogs with this condition be bred.

Von Willebrand's Disease A hereditary disorder appearing in some Keeshonden is Von Willebrand's disease (essentially haemophilia), a platelet disorder resulting in mild to moderately severe bleeding and a prolonged bleeding time. Careful pedigree analysis and blood testing have reduced the incidence of this disease by reputable breeders.

Hypothyroidism Keeshonden are subject to hypothyroidism and allergic skin diseases, both of which can often be treated. Sometimes skin diseases are a result of thyroid dysfunction. Current research indicates maternal antibodies as a major cause of hypothyroiditis. An untested mother, if affected by the disease and not demonstrating visible symptoms, will have circulating antibodies to the disease. When the foetus begins developing its own thyroid tissue, the antibodies attack brain tissue. In humans, it causes mental retardation but in dogs, it is believed to cause behavior problems. Once the foetus begins nursing, additional antibodies are passed to the newborn in the colostrum, eventually damaging the thyroid gland of the recipient. Studies indicate an euthyroid (normal on medication) mother is no longer circulating antibodies, thereby producing normal offspring. If each female is tested BEFORE breeding, in 5-10 generations, lymphocytic hypothyroiditis could greatly diminish. A complete thyroid panel, including T3, T4, free T3, free T4 and an antibody test are important. A subclinical bitch may not be showing visible symptoms therefore, only a blood test could determine an affected bitch.

Epilepsy Keeshonden are not as prone to epilepsy, a neurological seizure disorder, as they once were. Unfortunately, there is no test for this. Ask the breeder if there are any known epilepsy problems with dogs in your Keeshond's pedigree. Ethical breeders will be more than happy to discuss this with you.

Frequently Asked Questions

How do Keeshonden handle the summer heat?

Like any dog, to cope with summer heat the Keeshond needs a constant supply of water to drink and shade from the sun. If the dog is allowed inside then it will find its own cool spot (probably on the kitchen or bathroom floor if it is tiled or linoleum floor). Outdoors, the dog will probably dig a shallow hole by turning over a layer of soil to get to the cooler earth just beneath the surface. Some dogs like having ice added to their water to help keep it cool. Some also enjoy a children's wading pool filled with water in the summer time. The Keeshond sheds a lot of coat before summer, as soon as the weather starts to warm up, which also allows them to keep cool. Heavy exercise should be avoided in excessive heat. Curtail exercise times to be early morning or just after sunset. Once the dog is acclimated to his environment, he is usually fine. NEVER clip a Keeshond for the summer. Exposed skin is very prone to sunburn, which can lead to skin cancer. Also, the coat acts as an insulating blanket from the heat as well as the cold. Keeshonden are remarkably adaptable animals. However, one should never try and push a dog beyond his capability to cope with the heat. To do so can be disastrous. One must keep in mind the type of climate the dog is acclimated for and not look for signs of heat stress. Do not ever lock any dog in a car in direct sunlight, or in the shade for a great deal of time, even with the windows down a little for ventilation the heat generated by the dog is still enough to cause heat stress in summer.

What are they like with children?

Due to their gentle temperament the Keeshond is a very good family dog. The Keeshond was bred to be a family companion, after all. They enjoy the company of children, though common sense must be used when introducing any dog to young children. Keeshonden are generally patient by nature and will tolerate young children fawning over them, but this should be strictly supervised for the sake of the dog as well as the child. With these caveats in mind, since Keeshonden love attention, well behaved children get along wonderfully with well mannered and socialized Keeshonden.

What are they like inside a house?

Keeshonden, aside from the occasional invasion of masses of fur when they are shedding coat, are excellent house dogs. They are extremely clean dogs. They are very sure-footed and in no way clumsy around furniture. They will often pick out a favorite sleeping spot and stay there for hours. Favorite spots seem to be tiled and linoleum floors in warm weather, soft pillows or beds at other times. The dog may seek out drafty areas and possibly lie in front of doors with cold drafts during the winter.

How much exercise do they need, and what kind?

The Keeshond does not require a great deal of exercise, which makes the breed an excellent companion for apartment dwellers. A daily walk would suffice for most Keeshonden, although if you are "up" for a game of Frisbee or ball, the Keeshond will gladly oblige. Keeshonden have participated in many dog sports such as sledding, Agility, Flyball, Scent Hurdle Racing, Frisbee and have recently been recognized as a breed eligible to compete for Herding titles. The level of activity of your Kees really depends upon how much you wish to do with the dog.

Do they shed a lot?

Keeshonden blow their undercoats twice per year. They do not typically shed year round like many dog breeds. When they do blow their coat, they lose lots of hair (several grocery sacks full per week).

LIKE MANY OTHER spitz, the Keeshond (pronounced 'Kase-hund') is extremely sensitive, affectionate and adaptable, but it does have some health problems. The following list refers to conditions that have been reported in the breed, either here or in the USA, but that does not mean that every condition is commonplace. The breed has two health co-ordinators and has good contacts with the Universities of Cambridge and Cornell.

Primary hyperparathyroid disease (PHPT)

The condition occurs when a small benign tumour grows on one or more of the parathyroid glands. These four rice-sized glands can be found on either side of the thyroid. This tumour causes the over-production of parathormone (PTH) from the affected gland, which, in turn, causes a rise in calcium levels. If left untreated, organ failure can result, with the kidneys being the major organ affected.

Onset is in late middle-age (eight years plus), but a frequent early indicator of the disease is an increase in appetite for water and a general malaise. The tumour can be successfully removed, surgically.

The disease is passed on by an autosomal dominant gene. There has Alopecia X is cosmetic and the animal is otherwise healthy. Research has shown that it is in part due to a dysregulation of adrenal hormone production. The condition can resolve without treatment and in the Keeshond appears to resolve following neutering. The mode of inheritance is uncertain been active research done on this condition in both the UK and USA, and a DNA test is now available from Cornell University (New York State). Offspring of two negative parents are also negative for the PHPT gene.

Alopecia X

This condition has been found in a number of spitz breeds. It leads to coat loss, usually around the neck, rump and thighs. The condition is not sex-linked and the X is used to denote that the condition is not fully understood. Research has shown that it is in part due to a dysregulation of adrenal hormone production. The condition is cosmetic and the animal is otherwise healthy. Alopecia X can resolve without treatment and in the Keeshond appears to resolve following neutering. The mode of inheritance is uncertain.

Epilepsy

Idiopathic epilepsy has been reported in the breed. Age of onset varies from six months upwards. There are likely to be fits at intervals in affected dogs, varying in severity, but since seizures can be caused as a secondary feature of other diseases, each case must be examined to ensure that it is primary epilepsy and not connected to some other factor.

It is hoped that DNA analysis will enable the mode of inheritance of primary epilepsy in the Keeshond to be identified and a test be developed

Primary epilepsy is almost certainly inherited but in a complex manner. Recent funding has enabled collaborative research between the Universities of Cambridge and Cornell. It is hoped that DNA analysis will enable the mode of inheritance in the Keeshond to be identified and a test be developed.

Skeletal conditions

Judging from the number of dogs X-rayed for hip dysplasia, it has not been found to be a problem in the breed. Fewer than 100 Keeshonds per year are registered with the Kennel Club, but the number X-rayed through the BVA/KC scheme is about 50 over the whole period (from 1983 to the present day). The breed average is 12 plus, which is tolerable and puts the breed about halfway down the table. ::

THE KEESHOND is a member of the European spitz family. This ancient lineage connects, among others, the majestic Siberian Husky, the noble Norwegian Elkhound and the perky Pomeranian. This group of breeds hails from the frozen north, which is why they have a magnificent dense coat in common.

So far, so straightforward. But it's easy to get yourself into a right muddle trying to separate out the roots and branches of this complicated family, with all its near-relatives and close cousins. For a start, there's no consensus about how to distinguish all the different sizes and colours, so members of the spitz family are classified differently depending on where you are.

History of the Keeshond

While many European countries have adopted a name that means 'wolf dog' for this breed, (Lupini in Italian, and Chien Loup in French), the British have stuck with the Dutch word, Keeshond, which has nothing at all to do with wolves

We don't have a Giant Spitz, for example, as the Germans do. But then, we have the Pomeranian - which is a lot like the dog known elsewhere as the Toy Spitz and is not a whole lot different from the Keeshond (the Keeshond was once unkindly known as 'the overweight Pomeranian').

Then there's the question of country of origin. Despite having been once known in this country as 'the Dutch barge dog' and affectionately named 'the smiling Dutchman', the Federation Cynologique Internationale insists that the Keeshond is, in fact, identical to the Wolfspitz and is properly a German breed. While there are those who feel the Keeshond is an altogether different canine to the Wolfspitz, it's clear that all these dogs are very closely related. There's not much to be gained from quibbling about which came first or whether the breed's ancestors travelled up or down the Rhine.

While many European countries have adopted a name that means

'wolf dog' for this breed, (Lupini in Italian, and Chien Loup in French), the British have stuck with the Dutch word, Keeshond, which has nothing at all to do with wolves. The Keeshond is named after Cornelis de Gyselaer who was the leader of a rebellion against the House of Orange in the late 18th century. The House of Orange was closely associated with the Pug, so Cornelis took up this small but tenacious breed as a symbol of the rebels' cause. Kees was Cornelis' nickname and the dog came to be known as 'the dog of Kees', or Keeshond.

When the House of Orange was restored to power, things didn't look good for the Keeshond and it largely disappeared from Dutch cities. They still worked on farms as watchdogs and companions and were often seen on barges, where they kept a look-out and controlled vermin.

In the early years of the 20th century, some of these dogs found their way to Britain, where they were championed by a Mrs Wingfield-Digby, who was instrumental in founding The Dutch Barge Dog Club in 1925. The club changed its name to the Keeshond Club a year later. At around the same time, Dutch breeders also began showing an interest in this overlooked breed, and steps were taken to rescue the Keeshond from obscurity. Many decades on, the Keeshond is still fairly obscure - in the UK and the Netherlands - but its following is committed and enthusiastic - rather like the breed itself. ::

Suitability Keeshond

A BIT OF A PARADOX is this dog. On the one hand he has all the verve and charisma of a small dog, and on the other, there is a confidence that comes with the strength and stamina of a larger dog.

The Keeshond has always been a companion dog and is ideally suited to this role. Having never been bred to hunt or retrieve, he won't stray far from his family. He is adaptable and will happily settle to new surroundings, making him an easy travelling companion.

DO YOU OWN ONE OF THE FOLLOWING BREEDS?

- Cavalier King Charles Spaniel
- Japanese Shiba Inu
- Bernese Mountain Dog
- Swedish Vallhund

Would you like to attend one of our photo-shoots in Slough, see your dog in the magazine and get to keep some of the excellent photography? We're looking for dogs of all ages and colours (where relevant) and are particularly keen to know if you are expecting a litter or are about to get a pup. Write to: Julia Owen, Dogs Today, Town Mill, Bagshot Rd, Chobham, Surrey, GU24 8BZ enclosing a photo.

Would you be able to express what it's really like to live with one of the breeds we're soon to feature? If you have experiences to share please write in to Julia, at the address above.

Keeshonds love the car and will, given the chance, be first to the door to make sure they are not left behind! They do not generally get worried by heat, seeming to be less affected than many smooth-coated breeds. This may be due to the insulation offered by their double coat. Having said that, like all dogs, it is unwise to offer hard exercise in the heat of the day and no dog should be left in a car on a warm day, as temperatures quickly rise and organ failure and death can result.

One thing that will test the commitment of an owner is the maintenance of the coat, but it is worth persevering, as it is a mark of the breed's beauty, consisting of a long, stand-off weatherproof outer coat with a soft undercoat. The coat is not as difficult to keep as one might think, as long as puppies are taught from a young age to accept being groomed and owners ensure that they brush right to the skin. Keep grooming sessions with a pup short and reward him for good behaviour; you will reap the reward when your adult Keeshond stands or lies readily for grooming.

The coat should be brushed with a cushioned straight-pin brush at least twice a week, brushing right down to the skin. Brushes with pin heads on the ends will damage the coat. Care should be taken not to remove much of the thick undercoat that causes the guard coat to stand off. Regular brushing at all times will keep your dog's coat clean and looking good.

Particular care is needed when the dog moults the soft undercoat. Puppies shed fluffy tufts of their woolly baby coat and adults shed quantities of soft, light hair. One day the coat will be attached to the body, the next you will part the coat and notice that it is leaving the skin. This is the time to put the comb under the undercoat and lift it out gently. Do not tug with the comb - leave it until it comes out easily. The super-houseproud should be prepared to have hair around the house!

Keeshonds are intelligent and they learn easily - but, having learnt, they may pretend they never knew! However, their sense of fun will encourage their learning. A Keeshond likes to please and will enjoy any activity with you. Some Keeshonds in the UK have reached a high standard of agility competition, and in the USA it is a popular sport for many owners. Being natural show-offs they also enjoy freestyle dancing - the hard part can be keeping them quiet! Retrieving is not one of their strengths, being much too intelligent to partake in pointless games! However, owners both in the UK and USA have reached a good standard of obedience competition with their dogs.

Most are good eaters although some can be fussy as pups. Despite what they might try to tell you, they do not require large amounts of food and can put on weight readily if over-fed. They will live happily on complete foods or natural diets.

Keeshonds are intelligent and they learn easily - but, having learnt, they may pretend they never knew! However, their sense of fun will encourage their learning. A Keeshond likes to please and will enjoy any activity with you

They can be very appealing when wishing to share their owner's food and it is essential to be strongwilled if obesity is to be avoided.

As with any dog, it is important to ensure that your home and lifestyle are suitable for the adult dog that will ultimately be your responsibility. Be prepared to be asked lots of questions by the breeder, as they will wish to ensure that you are a suitable owner for their little bundle of fluff.

Keeshonds are great family dogs; they've been the faithful servants of humans for so long that it seems they have been programmed to understand us.

BREED READ

The Keeshond

This title in the Kennel Club Books series is published in America, and, as you would expect, is not therefore as UK specific as many British readers would like. For example, the vaccination schedule includes rabies as a routine jab. However, there's still plenty of information that is relevant to the UK reader - the history, care and training chapters in particular. After all, a Keeshond is a Keeshond wherever in the world he is. £16.99 inc p&p
